

Coroner Gray is investigating the affair in the following jury: E. W. Staples, contractor and builder; W. P. Camp, merchant; D. Jamison, shoe dealer; W. A. Burks, capitalist; H. Curry, contractor and builder; F. C. Williams, the roofer. The hearing of testimony will be held at 10 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. Police Justice Turner, the first witness, was in the jail during the riot. He saw police and militia fire, but heard no order to shoot. He said that he saw a man fire toward the order to fire. He said that if the militia had waited after the shot, no one else would have been killed. Because the crowd, he said, would have dispersed. A. L. Jamison saw half a dozen pistol shots fired from the jail. Immediately following that a fifth shot was fired. Then the crowd dispersed. A man shot from the crowd was fired at a dozen times at the jail. When the crowd was running they were pelted with longer existed except for those who would poison and delate and obstruct. Was it not the duty of the Senate to take the necessary steps to enable the body through its majority to reach a vote at some time. Legislation is not made by poisoning and delating. It is desirable to have the Senate divided into two groups, but it is not desirable if only one of them were to be had, then the one which led to action was the more important. The other group, which might be rash, might be ill-considered, might be rash but to debate and never vote was inefficiency. The House had no objection to the bill now pending the change of tariff and the removal of the Federal Election laws which would have been a great relief to the country than the Sherman act had done or was doing. It was not necessary to have the Senate divide the Democratic majority into two groups, but to enable the Democratic majority to pass the bill through the Senate; but he did not think it was wise to take the step which he believed it was necessary to take in order to pass a measure which the country would not make it as to all measures. The most important principle in the American government he believed was that the majority should rule. The majority, he thought, should rule in the Senate, not by violent methods, but by proper methods.
